Online Educational Resources for TAs Sat, Nov 7 9 a.m. – 12:30 p.m.

Journey Into the Internet to Discover Great Resources You Can Use Now

A half-day workshop (including breakfast snacks) led by Megan Simmons of the Institute for the Study of Knowledge Management in Education. This interactive, hands-on workshop will engage participants in finding, using, and modifying high-quality, free, and freely available online resources. Participants will reflect on their own processes and experience how Open Educational Resources (OER) can impact their teaching, using OER Commons (www.oercommons.org) and web-based collaboration tools, such as wikis and nings. Web resources from such services as the National Endowment for the Humanities, Library of Congress, Lincoln Center Institute, Kennedy Center's ArtsEdge, SF MOMA, and other arts-rich, education based sites.

About ISKME www.iskme.org The Institute for the Study of Knowledge Management in Education is an independent, nonprofit research institute. ISKME's OER and Arts Education Project, supported by a grant from the Ford Foundation, engages teachers and teaching artists in trainings around collaborative learning strategies and shared online resources and processes.
